Re: MSF's restructuring of access work puts at risk the gains made by the Access Campaign and the access to medicines movement at large

Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) has been at the forefront of access to medicines work for decades: its initiatives, including the Access Campaign and the Drugs for Neglected Diseases initiative (DNDi), have been critical in galvanizing public support and political will to expand innovation of and access to medical technologies. From its first campaign fighting to ensure access to antiretroviral therapy for patients at an MSF project in Thailand, to 2024's remarkable victory securing affordable access to bedaquiline for multi-drug resistant tuberculosis, the Access Campaign has driven countless successful campaigns in its 25 years. From work against harmful Free Trade Agreements (FTAs) that block generic competition, to highlighting the failings of the research and development models that maximize profits at the expense of public health, the Access Campaign has been a voice, a beacon, and a reference for many within and beyond the access to medicines movement.

The Access Campaign strengthens and joins MSF programmes, civil society groups, and patient networks to push for equitable access to affordable life-saving treatments and essential health technologies. The Access Campaign is a unique model that combines MSF's medical voice and local activism with evidence-based campaigning for policy change. While we commend MSF for what it has achieved, and the services it delivers at this very moment, we write today to express our serious concerns regarding the recent announcement on the fate of the Access Campaign.

The planned dismantling of the Access Campaign's core structure, capacities, expertise, and networks will reverberate across the access to medicines movement and beyond. It will be yet another setback to the already-shrinking patient activist and civil society space critical to holding pharmaceutical companies and governments accountable so that medicines are never a luxury.

This experiment will create a dramatically restructured and downsized team that will lack institutional continuity and fails to include the activism that goes hand-in-hand with technical work on access to medical products. The impact will be felt not only by MSF projects that rely on the Access Campaign for ensuring affordable access, but across resource-poor settings and by the populations it seeks to serve.

The closing down of the Access Campaign will have an extremely negative effect on the very populations with whom MSF stands in solidarity – the millions saved yesterday could see their lives cut short if we are not able to secure access to tomorrow's treatments.

MSF's foundational principle is that humanitarian actors should engage in témoignage - bearing witness and speaking out. No less important than speaking out is MSF's obligation to also listen when the communities it serves speak back. We encourage MSF management to listen and consider the wider access to medicines movement, particularly voices of the communities in the global south.

We write with one voice as patients, clinicians, MSF alumni, academics, non-profit R&D organizations, civil society groups, survivors, HIV networks and global health experts to say that while the MSF International Office has characterized the restructuring as merely shutting down a project, we believe it will cause catastrophic and irreparable damage to access to health technologies for communities served by MSF projects and beyond.

We urge you to reverse the decision to close down the Access Campaign and engage with our communities to ensure continued collaboration.

Sincerely,
